DECEMBER, NINETEEN HUNDRED AND NINETEEN

With the next issue, the COLUMBIA LAW REVIEW will resume the department of current legislation, in which it is proposed to bring to the attention of readers such recent statutes as reflect important legislative tendencies, or are of general interest to the legal profession because of their imposition of extraordinary liabilities, their effect on large classes of business, or the sweeping social reforms which they inaugurate. It is believed that, with the rapidly increasing substitution of statutory for judge-made law, a progressive legal publication should not neglect the legislative field; and in this department some of the striking and important measures will be from time to time reviewed, criticized, and compared.
